Devon Dowzers were out in force at RHS Rosemoor's Survivalist weekend which was held in their stunning gardens. We were asked by the RHS to teach dowsing to members of the public and were busy for the whole day.

On my arrival at the gardens Paul Gerry and Nigel Twinn were already marking out water lines, ley lines and a pictograph all of which attracted great interest from the public of all ages.

The main reason for this article was my initiation into energy points that Peter Mullen could see in the landscape and which I could not. However, I soon found that by standing on a specific spot and Peter on another that when either of us moved it disrupted the balance of the other. In addition you could feel heat to the soles of your feet. This exercise was carried out by members of the public with the same reaction. A most enjoyable and interesting day with many exciting energies which still need more practice. Many thanks to Peter.
