

More on Scorhill Stone Circle

Gwynn Paulett (August 2016)

Around a dozen Devon Dowzers and guests met up at Jo's house and proceeded under her guidance to Scorhill Stone Circle where she asked permission to enter, having dowsed various energy lines up the hill to the circle.

Jo's extensive knowledge and love of the area readily communicated itself to those of us who had not been to Scorhill before. A number of members identified Scorhill as their "spiritual home". The energy from the stones were on a par with those at Avebury even though they were smaller in size.

Dennis Wheatley's energy bands could be dowsed for the stones as well as the resulting aerial ley energy and to which other stones in the ring they were transmitting to. Diana with her bobber and I dowsed the largest stone and eavesdropped into the conversation taking place with the other stones being transmitted to.

As we walked to the rivers Alan searched and found where the Michael and Mary line split as well as the breadth of the line at that point. Those who had gone ahead were disappearing into the Tolmen stone, and were hopefully cured of any afflictions they were currently experiencing.

Crossing the granite bridges and sitting by the meeting of the Wallabrook and North Teign river was both restful and enlivening. Mike, one of our guests had a photo on his phone taken in January when the scene was far from peaceful with the river being a raging torrent and the Tolmen stone barely visible.

The afternoon ended back at Jo's with the campfire being lit, ready for those who wished to burn their respective burgers and sausage. Tea and cakes appeared from Jo's kitchen and a thoroughly good time was had by all. Sally led the clear up and the day ended sitting around the fire warming ourselves by the embers and enjoying the conversation.

Grateful thanks to Jo for her hospitality as well as her infectious love of the Moor and its ancient secrets.
